Anderson Bowman, yesterday, at the house of his mother, No. 22 Marshall street. It seems that Mrs. B. had recently been presouted with a large dog of the bu'l terrier species, an animal pleasant to those with whom he was familiar, but naturally very savage. A sister of the young man was out in the yard yesterd y morning, playing with the dog, patting him and making him give his paw, &c., &c. The brother looked on some time, and finally said that he could make the dog do the same. Saying this he got up, savanced to the brute and mally tendered them. Is would seem that some recognition of them by the city should have been proper and fit. But they came as no organized body, but simply as a camp bily treated.

was in the act of slooping to pat him on the head, when the dog sprang and caught the man in the mouth, loosening nearly all his front teeth, and badly mutilating his aw and indeed the whole of the lower part of the face. The man struggled to get away, when the dog loosed his hold, but instantly seized him by the throat. Mrs. Bow man happened to have a wash bowl in her hand, when hearing the screams of the daughter and sister, she rushed out and roke the bowl over the dog's head, whereipon he let go his grip. But he immediately caught hold of the man's leg, and tore it badly. The savage brute was at length choked off, and quickly shot. Young Bowman is employed in some ca-pacity on the A. & G. W. Railway. His wounds had been dressed, and he was as comfortable last evening as could be expected so soon after an encounter so seri-

A COWARDLY ASSAULT .- Yesterday morning three men, two of whom were Martin Rummel and a Mr. Baldwin, entered the saloon of Mr. B. Lied, 191 St. Clair street, when Mr. B. drew a note from his pocket and commenced talking about it in a pleasaut, half jocose way to Mr. Lied. On a sudden this Rummel sprang at Mr. B. and ommenced an assault upon him, though Mr. Lied thought that it was in jest. But seeing Mr. B.'s hat go off in a flurry of fisticuffing, Mr. Lied comprehended the situstion, and at once grappled with Rummel and thrust him out of the saloon. He thought no further of the matter.

In the afternoon Mr. Lied went down to the lamp factory on Frankfort street. Finding that his work was not yet done, he repaired to a saloon near by, in company with some man of the factory, and took a drink. Rummel appeared to be in there playing cards. He immediately began using Mr. L., and rose up as if to assault him. The latter told him to keep cool, and go on with his game. So Rummel subsided.

About three o'clock Mr. L., having done Shira
